

Gary Moore

I've been coaching couples for over 17 years. In my own case, and in the case of most couples I've worked with, we've never been taught how to "do relationship". It's not that we wouldn't do what we need to do to have a great marriage - we don't know what to do. And, it's very painful and difficult to learn what to do in the midst of trouble.

I've committed myself to teaching and inspiring others before they encounter major issues. But, I also coach those who are in the midst of "issues." I utilize a methodology that I call Mutual Understanding Method®. This straight forward, common sense approach weaves scripture and psychological research together.

Connect First

Communicate
Later

One of the most common marital issues that couples struggle with is communication. "We just don't communicate." "We're just not on the same wave length." "We feel so distant from each other."

Maybe the real issue is that you're approaching the problem from the wrong direction. You have to have connection, or mutual understanding, before you can have communication.

Connection is one of the topics covered in the Couples Conference. How do we connect? What happens when we seem to lose connection. How do we get it back?
